The world's first patent for a color TV was granted to a Mexican inventor, Guillermo González Camarena. He was 23 years old in 1940 when he obtained US Patent No. 2,296,022 protecting his invention of a "Trichromatic" system for color television transmissions.

Luis Miramontes was the main inventor of the birth control pill.

Victor Celorio obtained patents for the technology popularly known as Book On Demand, as well as that of Distributed Printing technology in which an e-book is distributed among as many printing centers as required for immediate production and delivery, thereby creating a vast network of digital bookstores and libraries.
